My dear friends,

After the race in Barcelona, we were quite eager to know where we would be compared to Mercedes, a curiosity highlighted by the not-so-encouraging signs we had seen in Sector Three at the Montmelò circuit.

We came to Monaco with our usual deal of humbleness and commitment, trying to make our best in view of an important result.

Sebastian had a good qualifying session, while Kimi did not handle it so well. This affected also his race, also marred by an on-the-edge move by Ricciardo in Turn 5.

Instead, Seb had the perfect race. He did not have a car to win, but he kept Rosberg under pressure for 78 laps. We had an unexpected gift from the Mercedes pitwall, but to enjoy this present you had to be ready. And Seb was, pipping Hamilton by 0.9 seconds on the second Safety Car line. Then he valiantly held off Lewis' charge in the final laps, despite the fact that Hamilton was now on Supersofts.

Overall, an unexpected second place which is another boost for making us grow with our car, our team and our company.

A big thanks to you guys for supporting us since Thursday-and one from myself for the support I had from you in a difficult moment.

Forza Ferrari, Forza Jules!
