Maranello, 13th April 2015

My Dear Friends,

The third race is under our belt and I can imagine many of you being particularly happy with a third and a fourth place finish, which, only one year ago, would have been an exceptional result. Well, none of us can be complacent, but then we've always stated that we must keep our feet firmly on the ground. This has been a very good race weekend, we had the best possible result in the race, and this is our main target.

We cannot hide the fact that we do not have the best car yet-in fact, the gap from the best one is still quite remarkable. But if I look at such cars as Williams and Red Bull, at where they are today, then I think that the job done in Maranello is outstanding.

Sebastian tried to be at Rosberg's heels through the race, but we must face the fact that both Nico and Lewis Hamilton had an edge on us.

Kimi approached the first turns on lap one with the grit that only a driver who's in control of his car can have. And he finished the race right there with his team-mate.

The pit wall did a sensible job and our mechanics managed four record-time tyre changes-so much for those who said that was our weak spot! Congrats to our guys, let's carry on like this, with our feet always on the ground, with the humbleness of those who pay respect to their opponents success, but also with the hunger needed for being able to beat, one day, the very people we respect.

Now we're heading for Bahrain, to a Grand Prix that last year saw our team take a real turn for the worse. We'll see where we are and if, as I believe, we can confirm ourselves as being second best, that will mean that we really are on the right path.

Forza Ferrari, Forza Jules!
