Dear friends,

Another difficult weekend for us, livened up considerably by Fernando who fought hard when the situation arose. Unfortunately we didn't have the pace to stay with the Williams duo and Ricciardo's Red Bull. One could say the good news was that he managed to keep the two McLarens behind him, after they went for a different strategy to us after the Safety Car appeared on the first lap. It's a shame we didn't manage a more worthy tribute to the United States Grand Prix in the year when our unique brand is celebrating 60 years in that country.

There are still two races to go and we still have a fight on our hands in both the Constructors' and Drivers' classifications, even if, unfortunately, it's not a fight for the top places.

A final word on something that affects us all: Jules is still fighting. It's difficult to predict how things might go, as his condition is still critical, but as I always say, as long as his heart is beating, there is still hope. So we continue to pray for him.

Forza Jules! Forza Ferrari!
